ViewRights is a PC-to-PC-remote-desktop-sharing tool. Its unique method allows you to share your desktop with up to 9 other users (9 remote computers) through any public and private network connection. Skid Row's newest offering is a very simple app that provides the basic functioning of a remote desktop connection. To use the program, just download the program first, and then you can view, control and even transfer files with another remote computer. While I was doing research for this post, I came across a lot of apps that could work for remote desktop. They all had similar features, but the app that caught my eye most was Remote PC Monitor. It had a lot of the same features that come with most of the programs that I've listed here. I decided to go ahead and make a comparison video between Remote PC Monitor and a few other programs that I've listed below. Super Remote is a new, simple app that will allow you to connect to your remote desktop remotely. It's a simple app that really does its job well. You just have to download it, enter the remote computer's IP address, and it should work from there. It is easy to use and could prove to be a useful tool for a lot of people. It is however pretty limited, so I've mentioned the features that it offers. Windows Remote Desktop Control is a pretty straightforward remote desktop control app. It's very simple to use, very stable, and could prove to be an excellent tool to add to your arsenal if you have remote desktop access problems. Once you install the app, you just press the single button on your remote computer to get a live feed of the desktop. This app is extremely simple, which is why I've chosen it as my recommended program for this article. To sum up, if you're looking for a simple remote desktop app that will allow you to control your remote computer, I'd recommend Windows Remote Desktop Control. It is simple, and is fairly reliable as well. For those of you who need more advanced control, you could try RPTools, which I'll go into more detail about in another post. XDesk is a more advanced app than Remote PC Monitor. The main difference between it and Remote PC Monitor is that XDesk has a lot more features than Remote PC Monitor. However, it's also much more complicated, so I recommend you look at XDesk's website for more information on how it works and what features it offers
